

Abstract Of The Disclosure

A method for triggering restraint devices is provided, in which the restraint devices are triggered as a function of a collision signal. The method is launched, however, when the collision signal exceeds a noise threshold. Now a time required for the collision signal to 5 exceed the noise threshold is taken into account in determining the triggering time for a specific restraint device.